Professor Lily Kong, who has served the National University of Singapore (NUS) for 24 years, and has strong research and management experience, will take on the role of SMU's Provost from September.

50-year-old Lily Kong is currently Vice Provost (Academic Personnel) at the NUS where she also holds the Provost's Chair Professorship.

Lily Kong has been a faculty member in the NUS Department of Geography since 1991. She played a key role in the establishment of Yale-NUS College when she was Vice-President (University and Global Relations) between 2007 and 2014. She was also the Acting Executive Vice President (Academic Affairs) of Yale-NUS College during the first two years of the inception of the College.

When she becomes SMU's Provost from 1 September, Lily Kong will be the second most senior personnel in the SMU management team, working closely with Professor De Meyer. Her main duties will include overseeing undergraduate and postgraduate curriculum development and planning, as well as driving research activities in SMU.

Professor Rajendra Srivastava, SMU's current Provost, will continue to serve as the Senior Vice President of SMU's International Office when he steps down as Provost on 31 August. He has taken on this concurrent role since end-2014.

At the briefing held yesterday, Professor De Meyer told the press that Professor Srivastava indicated more than a year ago his wish to step down. The University then started a search for a suitable candidate from July last year. In the process, the University considered about 20 local and overseas academics.

He said that the University had set out to appoint someone with a high academic standing, a background that is close to the disciplines that SMU focuses on, strong leadership capabilities and experience, as well as a deep understanding of the Singapore and global tertiary education landscape.

"The University was initially worried that we will not be able to find someone who can meet all these requirements. However, I'm very happy that we managed to convince Professor Kong to take on this role."

Lily Kong is widely regarded as a thought leader in religion, cultural policy and creative economy, heritage and conservation, and national identity. She said at the press briefing that one of the reasons she accepted the appointment at SMU was the familiarity with the disciplines taught at SMU. Lily Kong believes that she will be able to contribute to the research and teaching at SMU.

First female Provost in Singapore

Lily Kong also said that disciplines such as business management and marketing are founded on social sciences knowledge, as such she hopes to help students and faculty members develop their cross-disciplinary perspectives, by building on the current humanities offering and strengthening the University's curriculum and research.

She also hopes to further promote collaboration with international academic partners to broaden the global exposure of SMU students. At SMU, Lily Kong will also hold the Lee Kong Chian Chair Professorship of Social Sciences.

On becoming Singapore's first female Provost, Lily Kong said, "Around the world, many universities have few female leaders in senior positions, there are many reasons for this, these reasons are not necessarily linked to their academic qualities. From this perspective, I'm honoured with this achievement in academia, which is made possible only with support from my family and opportunities from colleagues."
