

Green supply chain push

Singapore: The Singapore Management University (SMU) and DHL are launching the Green Transformation Lab, a sustainable logistics research and development centre to be based at SMU.

“As one of the world’s biggest logistics hubs and with a total value of merchandise imports and exports being three times greater than Singapore’s GDP, sustainable supply chains are vital to its continued economic success,” the pair said in a release today. The Green Transformation Lab will provide thought leadership and practical tools to encourage and drive green supply chains in Singapore and the region. [29/04/11]
